

How to Be a Renaissance Hero

Ever wondered what it would be like to live like a Medici? Most of us will never have a chance to live that kind of privileged and affluent life, much less rule over large chunks of Italy. But we can do one thing that the Medici family famously did: we can support an emerging artist on his journey to fame and fortune.

Ron Jones, a Vancouver pen and ink artist, has been asked to exhibit his work in New York City at the Amsterdam Whitney Gallery in January of 2009. A New York show is something most artists only dream about. This may be the break he has been working for. The catch? Getting his work and himself to New York takes quite a bit of money.

So, Ron has come up with a unique approach to fundraising: he's selling "shares" in his exhibit. For only $50, you can play the role of a Renaissance duke or duchess and help get Ron and his work to New York. In exchange for this investment, each shareholder will receive—in addition to Ron's gratitude—the following: a post card from New York sent by Ron, an autographed 5 x 7 photo of Ron at his opening and a 5"x 5" pen and ink ORIGINAL work created and signed by Ron.

If a $25 half share is more in your budget range, you'll get the post card and photo and an autographed deck of playing cards with Ron's Erratic Drip design on the back. You can select the lucky card in the deck for him to sign.

Don't miss out on this chance to be a modern Renaissance hero, playing the part of a Medici for this wonderful local artist.
